and saw to it that the men had the crosses when they entered the trenches for the first time. "The men had considerable difficulty conversing with French priests to whom they had to confess, so Father Duffy had a large number of 'confession cards' printed. These contained the questions of the confession in French and English, and in this way the soldiers were able to admit their faults. Gave Them "Hell First" "Father Duffy found, however, that the men went more frequently to the French priests for confession than to himself. 'They're using the cards altogether too much,' said Father Duffy ruefully. 'All the French priests give is absolution. I give them hell first.' "Father Duffy never stayed behind when the 69th went hiking, and I'd often meet him on a country road, plodding from one camp to another six or ten miles away. For the most part, the men of the 69th had no complaints to make, but on the score of shoes there was deplorable inefficiency shown by the quartermaster's department. "When the command started on one winter hike of between forty and sixty kilometres some of the men went almost without shoes—the soles were so badly worn. It was as a result of this march that the feet of some of the men were frozen, and they had to be sent home. Some of the 69th's officers were shifted for this. "The 69th was not in the trenches when I last saw Father Duffy, on March 20. They had left Luneville and were marching back to camp for rest. Then men are in the trenches for five days at a time, and hold the line in three shifts." lowa Regiment Wins Glory Mr. Atkins told also of the other the office or with attached Self Collar for outdoors-$2. crosses when they entered the trenches Patriotism isn't shown by cheers, but by cheques. nonor of being the first American contingent to penetrate and hold German lines.

"The Iowa boys went out and went through two rows of Hun trenches before they were stopped," he said. "By the time they got to hem there were few Germans left anve, so they brought back few prisoners."

The very first night the Rainbow Division filed silently into their trenches, five devil-may-care Alabama boys went "over the top" in a little offensive all their own. They had just settled down when they saw a band of Germans patrolling No Man's Land.

It was a large patrolling party, and orders had been issued that no movement be made that night. Both comsiderations notwithstanding, the band of five clambered quietly over the parapet and started to stalk the enemy.

The Germans were taken by surprise. When the doughty Alabamans
